

Below, we delineate the concerns and requests regarding our original submission, and we detail the ways in which we have addressed each item.

1. Please acknowledge in the limitations that positive and negative affect were assessed using a continuous scale. There is evidence to suggest that positive and negative affect are separate, though highly correlated, constructs; therefore, using continuous scale may overlook some of the nuanced ways in which affect is associated with other constructs.

We now address this as a limitation in our discussion.

2. On p. 35, line 724, you refer to @hsiehSampleSizeTables1989. I assume this is a reference that was not properly converted. Please correct this.

We have corrected this reference formatting error.
